Places Visited

Harrogate

One of the largest manhunts the country had ever seen was involved in the search for Agatha Christie, and, after 11 days on 14th December 1926, she was found, safe and well, staying in Harrogate at the Swan Hydro, now the Old Swan Hotel. With almost no luggage, under the name of Theresa Neele, it seems she'd travelled to London and boarded a train to the spa town after having seen an advertisement at the railway station. Harrogate was a fashionable spa town with elegance everywhere. Agatha Christie did nothing to arouse suspicions as she thoroughly enjoyed her stay, joining in with the balls and dances. She was eventually recognised by a banjo player at the hotel, Mr Bob Tappin, who alerted the police. Her husband, Colonel Christie, came to collect her immediately but she kept him waiting in the hotel lounge whilst she finished dressing for dinner! Its heritage as a fashionable spa resort continues in the Montpellier Quarter with the Royal Pump Room Museum, documenting the importance of local mineral springs. Nearby is the restored, Moorish-style Turkish Baths & Health Spa. Both of which you will visit during your stay.

Turkish Baths

In its heyday, Harrogate was known as 'the English spa' and a leading destination for European high society. The Turkish Baths was part of a vast number of facilities available in the Royal Baths Complex which opened in 1897. As well as the Turkish Baths, other treatments included the medicinal waters dispensary, hydrotherapy departments, steam rooms and mud baths. Today you can get a sense of this history while enjoying a more contemporary spa experience in these magnificent surroundings.

Royal Pump Room Museum

Harrogate's development as a prosperous and flourishing spa town dates back to the 16th century. William Slingsby discovered the first spring in 1571 in the area now known as High Harrogate. It was named the Tewit Well Spring and the water coming from this spring was found to be medicinal. People, both rich and poor, began to come in increasingly large numbers to test the curative powers of the waters. By the late 1600s more springs, including the sulphur spring, in Low Harrogate had been discovered. The different waters were recommended for the treatment of a variety of ailments including epilepsy, scurvy and skin complaints such as ulcers and sores. The springs were by now being used by travellers from all over the country. The waters come from an ancient geological sea far below the earth's surface and rise up through faults in the Carboniferous rock.

When first discovered, the waters ran into the surrounding ground creating a marshy area. Visitors brought along their own ladles and cups to scoop up the water or put it directly onto their skin. However, the increasing numbers of visitors and rising knowledge of disease led to four wellheads being erected in 1772 and in order to provide facilities for this surge, accommodation and entertainment venues were built. One of these was the Royal Pump Room (the building that now houses the museum), a grand octagonal building. Under cover from the elements, and at a charge, the water was served in a glass and customers could enjoy bands while they promenaded in the building. To meet the needs of the poor, who also continued to require access to the sulphur water, a free tap was provided outside the building. This tap remains to this day, although it is no longer recommended for drinking!

There was an established daily routine at the Pump Room. Visitors would arrive between 7am and 9am and drink one or more glasses of water. Afterwards they would join the promenaders outside where they would mingle and gossip before taking breakfast. Shortly afterwards the chronically sick would have hot bath treatments, whilst others would go shopping, sightseeing or attend parties. Doctors recommended that the basic length of 'the cure' should be for a period not less than three weeks.

Newby Hall

Newby Hall is the family home of Mr & Mrs Richard Compton and an example of one of England's finest houses and an exceptional example of 18th century interior decoration. Built in the 1690s in the style of Sir Christopher Wren the house was later enlarged and adapted by John Carr and subsequently Robert Adam. The incredible contents of the house, collected by Weddell, ancestor of the Compton family, on the Grand Tour include a rare set of Gobelin Tapestries, a gallery of classical statuary and some of Chippendale's finest furniture.

There are 25 acres of award-winning gardens to enjoy full of rare and beautiful plants and the famous double herbaceous borders are flanked by numerous compartmented gardens, such as the rose and autumn gardens and the water garden.
